April 9, 1865 - 1965

Here on an April Sabbath day
Met North and South, the Blue and Gray.
The destiny of dark and light,
The dream of freedom, black and white;

And here met two of God's own men
Whose ways we may not know again.
A stillness came that day in spring,
As if upon an angel's wing.
So let us now, across the years
Of love beyond all ancient fears,
Renew their simple pledge of peace —
Till sun and stars and time shall cease.

Modern Day Blacksmith

The Tools Are Unchanged But Old Methods Won't Do

Longfellow's storied village smithy who stood under the spreading chestnut tree may be the most famous blacksmith in the land, but he's not worth copying after in the 20th century.

Besides, Patrick Lair, Jr., who shoes horses, alright, isn't a blacksmith . . . he's a farrier. The latter makes his entire speciality the art of shoeing horses, leaving off the metal work and wagon wheel-making that was common to the traditional blacksmith.

In a motor fuel age where the distance between horse owners might be many miles, a horse shoer who took a stand under a fixed tree would starve to death. The 25-year-old Lair makes a good livlhood by going mobile. He takes his forge, anvil, tongs, hammer and pricket to the customer, all in a mobile motor van.

Summer's Busy

Lair, who lives with his parents, Commander and Mrs. Patrick Lair, on 300-acre Lo-Lair Farm, near Pamplin, operates in an 80 to 90 miles radius of his home, shoeing as many as 100 horses a month in the busy summer months. The work slackens off when winter months stop the area's horse shows and riding by horse owners.

A veteran farrier of six years in the trade, Lair was apprenticed in the Norfolk area, where he graduated at Princess Anne High School. His Navy family was living there at the time. His love of horses, their proper care and conditioning came earlier than that, however.

It developed while his father, Commander Lair, now retired from Naval service, was stationed in London on an American embassy tour. The family lived at Enfield, 12 miles from London in the heart of the British horse and riding-to-hounds territory. Horses got into Patrick's blood then. It was strengthened while the family was stationed at the Quantico Marine Base where riding horses were available to servicemen and their families.

Took Rare Course

Lair climaxed his trade preparations taking the horseshoeing course at Michigan State University. It's available only at institutions in Michigan, New York and California. Lair knows because he spent much time in negotiating for admission, to the rare three-months course. He was an all 'A' student, he likes to recall.

Shoer horses and riding horses which are often ridden regularly shoeing every six weeks to two months. Thus a good farrier gets a lot of repeat business. In this concrete and macadam age, a horse's hoofs get worn down without shoes and the feet get tender. Horses in parades walk almost exclusively a route over paved streets, thus shoeing care is quite important.

Like midday's, horses feet come in a variety of sizes. In fact, eight sizes of horse shoes are fabricated . . . No 1 through No 8. The farrier selects the proper size, then must cut and shape it additionally to fit the horse. Every animal has feet differing from all others. There are also front and rear shapes in all eight sizes.

Some horses, like the walking horses, are so complex to shoe that the farrier starts with a straight bar, molding and fitting it to each case.

Uses Soft Steel

Lair gets his shoe materials from a Lynchburg wholesale hardware outlet. They're manufactured in Illinois . . . only place in the nation making them, Lair believes.

He's a professional welder, too, carrying an acetylene welding rig in his mobile unit. Horse shoes for customers whose horses perform frequently on paved streets and roads usually have the shoes hard-surfaced by the welding process.

And what is a pricket, we asked Lair recalling his list of van materials? Well, a shoe has to be nailed to the hoof. Depending on the size of the animal . . . from pony to dray horse . . . the nails vary in size, from No 4 to No 12. The nail holes have to be varied in size to accommodate varying sizes of nails. The pricket is the tool to enlarge the nail holes.

And what does a farrier do with a mean horse? Well, this does raise problems, Lair states, but not often since most animals can be managed by proper methods. But a really obstreperous animal can be managed to suit the modern age.

A shot from a vet can quiet the animal long enough to get the job done.

a hickory pole with a huge flag attached, and handed it up to him, still remaining unseen. He hoisted that hickory pole and its flag and waved it aloft. So far as I can recall, though thousands heard what follows, it has never been published. Here are his words: "I brought with me today one of the flags, one of the few flags, that that day was surrendered and carries now the marks of the bullets that passed through it. This flag was in the Seven Days: this flag flapped at Chancellorsville; this flag was on the ridge at Gettysburg; this flag went through all the experiences and all the blood and slaughter of the Wilderness and of Spottsylvania Court House: this flag was at Ream's Station, this flag, my father saw it, came up the hill when the Crater was recovered at the end of July in 1864 and this flag, with the tears of the men who bore it, was laid down on that red clay field half a mile up the road. It was saved and carried to Connecticut where I bought it. And I'd like to beg that when I die I'm going to have this flag brought here in the County of my Mother and I hope that you will be a symbol of the stands, the reconciliation of gentlemen as gentlemen. —Appomattox need no longer represent strife and woe and humiliation. Eternally it must stand as an example of the reunion of brothers who never must permit the birth of clans to take the place of the strife of states. WE must never, by anything we do or leave undone, keep this America of ours from being the dedicated shrine of that sacred place."

And so on this Centennial may be recall the words of the ancient prophet who wrote: "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." The flag of Dr. Freeman's address is now on exhibit at the local park service collection.

Presbyterians To Hear Missionary

A young American college professor and his wife eight years ago docked in Brazil on a mission. They had come as Christian missionaries to teach Brazilian young people in a country with the highest illiteracy rate in Latin America.

This Sunday morning, Arthur M. Kindsay, assistant principal of the Fifteenth of November School in Carambuna, Brazil, will speak at the WALKER'S Presbyterian Church at Hixburg at 9:45 a.m. and at the Appomattox Church at 11:00 a.m. Members of the communities are cordially invited to hear Mr. Lindsay.

Besides assisting with administration, Mr. Lindsay teaches courses in English, Math, and Bible at the Garanhuns School with an enrollment of over 700. He teaches also a Bible course in the mission's nearby Bible Institute. Once a month he preaches in the local Presbyterian Church. On Sunday afternoon he and Mrs. Lindsay sponsor a program for the school's non-Christian students.
